Amway, a $10.8 billion direct selling business based in Ada, Michigan, USA, announced the appointment of Mark Stevens as its chief financial officer. Stevens will be responsible for leading Amway’s worldwide financial functions including accounting, financial planning and reporting, forecasting, insurance, internal audit, treasury and tax.

Most recently, Stevens served as vice president of worldwide sales finance for Apple. Under his direction, the team managed a $153 billion portfolio, representing 90% of the company’s revenues outside of Apple stores.

Stevens spent 21 years of his career living in Asia, including Singapore, China, Malaysia and Japan. While working at Motorola, he served as the finance lead on the team establishing the company’s first sales representation in the Asia Pacific region. He later moved to Dell where he served as vice president of finance for the Asia Pacific region.

Stevens has strong ties to West Michigan, having graduated from Hope College in Holland, Michigan. He is a Certified Public Accountant and holds an MBA from DePaul University.

Stevens replaces Mike Cazer, who was appointed to the role of chief operating officer in 2014.
