Company is working closely with local authorities to ensure product availability

Chocolate and candy maker Mars Wrigley India have called for steps to mitigate disruptions in the free movement of goods, especially inter-state, as well as warehousing, manufacturing and distribution challenges for food companies during the lockdown due to coronavirus pandemic.

However, the company is working closely with local authorities to ensure product availability.

FMCG companies such as HUL and Parle Products have highlighted the need for clear instructions to be provided to enforcement authorities across states for smooth transportation of essential items and functioning of supply chain amid the nationwide lockdown due to coronavirus outbreak.

The company at its manufacturing sites is operating in a way that minimizes risk through continuous temperature screening, providing sanitizing facilities and masks for all staff, as well as frequent advisories on maintaining social distance, and shift interventions to reduce physical interaction between our associates.
